

Sukhumvit Area

For many travellers, the arterial Sukhumvit road is synonymous with the vibrant nightlife of Bangkok. A number of odd and even numbered Soi's (streets) criss-cross along Sukhumvit, pregnant with glitzy malls, restaurants and shops. The area comes alive in the evenings with temporary stalls full of clothes, jewellery and bric-a-bracs emerging on the sidewalks. The indispensable Sky Train rumbles above Sukhumvit road, which extends into Ploenchit and Siam Square and will glide you over the lively shopping hubs of the city.

Indian

Akbar

The 36 years old Akbar Restaurant offers Indian, Pakistani and Arabic cuisines with plenty of options for vegetarians. The location, just off the Nana BTS Station, is an added plus if you are looking for a pit stop between shopping.

Indian and Chinese silks, spices and precious stones glimmer from the numerous shops at the historic Charoen Krung area, built by the order of King Rama IV in 1861. Chiang Mai

FOOD CULTURE

Located on the northern plains with a lush countryside and mountains and with rivers crisscrossing the city, Chiang Mai never had a history of coconuts in its cuisine. Till date, you will find the characteristic coconut flavour associated with Thai cooking, missing in this part of the country. Red meat is a popular component to meals, which almost always have sticky rice. And if you love spicy food, Chiang Mai will be a gastronomical delight - the food tends to have a zingier tinge to it here. Vegetarians and vegans have plenty of options here, given that the popularity of organic produce is on an all time high.

Chang Klan (Prostrating elephant) Road Area

The burst of expansion in Chiang Mai has made the city stretch out in all directions, but the Chang Klan and Loh Kroi areas remain the most vibrant for tourists, with the night market close by and plenty of options to stay. This is the old part of the city, brimming with cafes, bars and restaurants – Chiang Mai's nightlife at its best.

Hua Hin

FOOD CULTURE

Influenced by both central and southern cuisines, Hua Hin is the perfect place to try the best of both – coconut heavy flavours and hot fish curries with beans, bamboo and potatoes. Given its proximity to the coast, Hua Hin gets a steady supply of fish, lobsters, crabs, mussels, prawns and scallops which can be fried or cooked in soupy noodles. The flavours are not so bold but have the characteristic Thai tinge.

Hua Hin Night Market Area

The resort city of Hua Hin exudes a mixed vibe of a relaxed seaside city with a busy cosmopolitan ambience, making it an exciting destination for travellers. The main Thanon Phetkasem road, which stretches parallel to the beachfront, is busiest at the night bazaar junction. Most of the restaurants are located here – perfect to enjoy the vibrant nightlife, markets and food.

Do you know that flowers can be eaten?

Certain kind of flowers can be turned to a delicious dish especially for vegetarians such as rose, plumeria, Ixora, blue/butterfly pea, and lotus with shrimp paste or sweet sauce. Some also use these in salads or put flowers like agasta and cowslip creeper in soup. These flowers actually have healing power, such as, rose is good for your heart, plumeria is used to treat fever, and Ixora helps increase appetite and improve digestion.

Krabi

FOOD CULTURE

If you saunter into Thai restaurants in Krabi, apart from the regulars, it is easy to find some influence of Malay food. This means that your palate should get ready to experiment with fish curry sauce, cucumber dishes, pineapple, pickled cabbage and other fruits and vegetables. Of course, Indian food is also very popular in Krabi – it's not difficult to find lip-smacking paneer dishes with naan.

Ao Nang Beach Road, Krabi

Krabi's aqua marine waters, a tryst with Hollywood and a steady stream of travellers has made it one of the most coveted beach destinations of Thailand. The popularity brings with it a range of international cuisines along the main Ao Nang Beach road where lie a lively mix of restaurants. The road is especially alive in the evenings when sunbathers and scuba enthusiasts leave the sand and step out to try different haunts that Krabi has to offer.

Indian

Bombay Palace

The air is heavy with the aroma of Indian spices as you pass Bombay Palace. One of the better-known options for Indian cuisine in Krabi. There's a large array for both veg and non-veg customers to choose from. Aloo bhajji, paneer butter masala and desserts like gulab jamun are among the favourites.

Pattaya

FOOD CULTURE

Pattaya emulates the food culture of Bangkok, though with far lesser options. Given the influx of tourists here, you are likely to find cuisines from all over the world. Though home cooking still retains some essence of tradition, especially in Thai desserts. You will find the use of pickles and herbs, roasted or grilled well for an additional punch to the taste.

Situated at the edge of the Gulf of Thailand, Pattaya lies only 160 km (2hrs) from the capital, Bangkok, and is a popular getaway for tourists. When it comes to restaurant and a lively night life, the coastline along the Bang Lamung district, also known as Greater Pattaya, is where you should be heading to. The entire stretch from east of Nakula beach on the north, to the main Pattaya beach, Pratumnak Hill areas around the Southern Jomtien beach are worth exploring. Cuisines from all parts of the world are offered in atmospheric joints; Indian cuisine occupying a large part of the topography and the palate.

Which bread?!

Indian food can be enjoyed with perhaps a mindboggling variety of bread. In the North, wheat is a staple food and used to make chappati, phulka roti, naan and other breads. Indulge in stuffed bread with vegetables and layered with either ghee (clarified butter). Poori is fried bread and usually had at breakfast or during festivals. In the South, the flat breads are crepes or dosa made from black lentils and rice. The popular varieties include dosa, appam, uttapam, Kallappam, rice or ragi rotis.
